The Fondation Bettencourt Schueller: Helping scientists spread their wings

Fondation Bettencourt Schueller uses a novel funding strategy: it treats all its awardees like family, allowing them a say in the process via an advisory board and often offering continuing support.

This article has been commissioned by the sponsor and produced by the Science AAAS Custom Publishing Office. Whole Story

What can we learn from Dartmouth?

In light of the recent lawsuit against Dartmouth College, our columnist reflects on her graduate experience there and possible ways forward. Whole Story

Moving internationally was tough—but I ended up finding my inner Wonder Woman

How a postdoc overcame the challenges of working in a new country. Whole Story

Publication history helps explain racial disparity in NIH funding

New study doesn't eliminate possibility of bias during review but highlights a possible way to address the funding gap. Whole Story

How you set out on your own as an independent consultant?

It can be a welcome alternative for those who prize independence, our columnist writes—but don't ignore the tradeoffs. Whole Story

To develop healthy coping skills during grad school, first I had to hit rock bottom

The pressures of grad school can make it seem like other parts of life don't matter. They do. Whole Story
